Families looking for an active outing in Grand Prairie can consider an open house Amped Obstacles has listed for Sunday, Nov. 8, from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. The business's event page says admission is free, but advance reservations are required and indoor capacity is limited.

The planned activities include obstacle-course challenges, Ninja Warrior-style challenges, games, giveaways, and fitness and wellness experiences. The event is listed at 2626 Aero Drive in Grand Prairie. Because the schedule and event details come from the organizer's own promotional page, readers should check that page before making plans in case anything changes.

The open house may also offer a way for area businesses to introduce themselves to visitors. Amped Obstacles is inviting DFW-area businesses to apply for vendor space. According to its application page, there is no standard vendor fee, but applicants are asked to contribute an item such as a product, service, gift card, voucher or experience for a giveaway. Applying does not guarantee a space, and the page does not identify any vendors as confirmed participants.

For small businesses, the arrangement is a potential exchange: an opportunity to meet people at a community event in return for contributing something to the giveaway. Businesses considering an application should review the organizer's terms and confirm whether applications are still being accepted.

Amped Obstacles describes itself as a small, family-run Grand Prairie business. That description is the company's own, rather than an independently confirmed detail. The event listing likewise comes from the organizer; no independent confirmation of the open house or its schedule was available in the supplied research.

Before heading out, reserve a place and check the event page for the latest information on capacity, activities and timing.
